The Scottish Cancer Prevention Network Art & Design Prize for Creative Communication

Each year, the SCPN invites applications to our Art & Design competition, from students at Scotland's art & design schools. New for this year, eligible projects can be developed at any stage during degree-level study, and as before, entries may be in any medium, but should involve behaviours which are identified as impacting on our risk of developing cancer: bodyweight, physical activity/inactivity, smoking, alcohol consumption, UV radiation and nutrition etc.

The winner receives a cash award, but perhaps more importantly, has their design publicised on social media and in our newsletter, which is circulated to several thousand individuals throughout Scotland and beyond, with the hope that good ideas can be taken further and used to help raise awareness of cancer prevention, or perhaps in other intended ways. Winners are provided with a certificate and an SCPN prize seal, which can be used on your portfolio site and/or print materials to show visitors that your work is award winning. Our 2015 prizewinner was featured on STV and in several Scottish newspapers.

Take a look at our website (thescpn.org/art-prize) to find out more about the SCPN, as well as view the work of previous prize-winners and to fill out this form electronically. You may also wish to explore the European Code Against Cancer (cancer-code-europe.iarc.fr/index.php/en/), which details 12 ways we can reduce cancer risk.

Please return this form either physically or electronically by Friday 17th May 2019.

Please provide a name for your project

In no more than 300 words, please describe your project, and explain what you intend to submit once it is completed.

Briefly explain how your project relates to cancer prevention. (You may wish to refer to the European Code Against Cancer (see introduction overleaf) for guidance).

If applicable, briefly describe what you'd like to see happening with your project in an ideal world, for example, would you like to work with health professionals to develop your product further or would you like your sculpture displayed in a specific location?
